POCKET COMPANION.

THE antiquity of the town of Shrewsbury is one of those points in history that remains, at this hour, hid under the veil of obscurity. There is not a doubt of it's foundation being laid in a very early period of time, for it is mentioned by a celebrated searcher into antiquities,* that it was built 438 years before the Christian æra.

Indeed we have found it recorded, that the fpot on which the present town stands upon was occupied by a part of the roman legion which was stationed at Uricenium, (now Wroxater), but not wishing to lead the reader into the wilderness of ambiguity, suffice it to say the natural strength of the situation favors the assertion.

So early as the year 617, Brockwel Ysithroe, Prince of Powis Land, resided in his palace in this town, which was on the spot where Saint Chad's church lately stood, and destroyed by fire during the ravages of the Saxons.

A. D. 777 The Britons, who there is great reason to believe rebuilt the town, and had been in possession of it above 200 years, were obliged to relinquish their darling residence to Offa, king of Mercia, who forced them beyond the dyke, (still called Offa's Dyke,) which he had made as their boundary.

From this period the town began to encrease in honor as well as in population; for the wise Alfred placed it among his list of cities, calling it Caer Pengwerne (The city on a woody hill). Edward the elder bestowed a signal mark of his royal favor to this town, in ordering a mint for the coining of money here,

Shrewsbury A. D. 1006 was honored by the presence of majesty, attended by a splendid and numerous court; Ethelred had by an edict in the year 1002 brutally caused a general massacre of the Danes within his kingdom, Roused by the pon revenge, and accordingly invaded England. I preading the dreadful devastation of fire and sword wherever they came; and carrying away from the unfortunate victims what they could not destroy. Hurt at the sufferings of his haples subjects, Ethelred advised with the nobles attending him in Shrewsbury, and proposed the sum of 10,000l to be paid annually to the Danes provided they would leave the kingdom; this not being agreed with, the tribute was enhanced to 48,000l.*

About this time Edric, duke of Mercia, sonin-law to Ethelred, (whom our historians have justly honored with the appellation of False,) invited prince Alshem to partake of an entertainment in Shrewsbury, and upon riding a hunting with him, led the devoted prince into a byeplace, where he was attacked and most cruelly murdered, within a few miles of the town, by an assassing in the faithless Edric, who, it is said, triumphed over his bleeding victim!

A. D. 1016 the inhabitants of the town fufiered all the vengeance of offended royalty, owing to their having revolted in favor of Canute the Dane.

When the Normans settled in this kingdom, we find Shrewsbury "a well built and populous town," for in the reign of Edward the Confessor it paid gelt according to 200 hides of land.

In the beginning of the reign of William I. this town was closely belieged by a powerful body of the Welsh, commanded by the valiant Owen Gwynedd; but William brought a numerous army to it's relief, and obliged Owen to raise the siege, cutting great numbers of his brave followers in pieces.

This monarch gave the town and county to his kinsman Roger, and created him 1st. earl of Shrewsbury; and the town paid 40l. yearly tribute to him. The Salopians had no reason to be disatisfied with the ruler that the conqueror had placed over them; his good-will towards the welfare of their souls was soon distinguished, by his building a magnificent monastery; and his strengthening their weaker side, by sortifying the isthmus with a strong castle, proves him to have had some little regard for their bodily concerns.

About

About the year 1098 Hugh, the 2d. earl, who was killed in Anglesey, by Magnus, K. of Nor-way, was interred with "great pomp and lamentation," near to the remains of his father in the monastery.

from this state of tranquillity Shrewsbury was soon plunged into the horrors of war by the rebellion of earl Robert against Henry I. Upon his fortifying the castle, and building a wall to the Severn from each side of it, the king, after taking Bridgnorth, came before it with 60,000 men; Henry threatened to hang all he should take in the town if it was not delivered up to him in three days: The earl dreading the confequences of a siege, sent the keys to the king, acknowledging his treason, and he was immediately banished into Normandy, to the great joy of the oppressed Salopians. It was in this town that William, son of K. Henry, A. D. 1116 received homage from the nobles of the kingdom.

The nation being divided in the reign of Stephen concerning his right to the crown, many of the nobility rose in support of the empress Maud, among these, William Fitz Allan appeared one of the foremost in her favor; and being governor ty. he defended the castle against the resolute Stephen with an undaunted zeal: however, his saithful garrison was at length overcome by assault, and himself obliged to sly from the town, leaving his estates &c. to the mercy of the exassperated monarch. True to his honor, he did not deviate from those principles which he had at the risk of his life and fortune supported; and firmly adhering to the interest of the empress, till her son (Henry II.) was honored with the regal dignities, his integrity was gratefully rewarded; and, at his own request, was re-instated in the office of sheriff for the county, and enjoyed it until his death.

In the year 1138 the mortal part of the immortal St Winefred, (of headless memory,) was brought out of Wales and deposited with great pomp in the abbey at Shrewsbury.

Ewenwynwyn, lord of Powis, having come to Shrewsbury in the beginning of the reign of K. John, to meet that king's council, was dishonorably made prisoner of by them, and confined in the castle, to deter the Britons from ravaging the borders: And some time afterwards they fent to this town a youth under 7 year's old, as an hostage; but owing to some sault on their side, the little innocent Briton was hanged here by one of the king's creatures.

Not long after this the Welsh shewed some litde revenge: Their prince Llewellin with a numerous body of his hardy subjects marched triumphant through the borders, to the walls of Shrewsbury; and the town and castle immediately surrendered to him.

We must not pals over in silence a rare instance of humility in one of the episcopal bench, which happened in the latter end of John's reign. Robert, bishop of Bangor, who was born in this town, at his own request, was buried in the middle of the market place!

Shrewsbury did not continue long in the hands of it's new masters, for we find A.D. 1220, about five years after it's surrender, that Henry III. kept his court here, and sent for Llewellin, who came, and the two princes amicably settled some differences.

In the rebellion of Richard, earl of Pembroke against Henry, A.D. 1232, this town experienced for the confederate army having join'd the Welsh under Llewellin, plundered the inhabitants of the marches, and laid the whole country waste; then entering Shrewsbury, they robbed the unfortunate Salopians of whatever was worth carrying away; and, after massacreing with the sword a great number of them, burned a considerable part of the town.

A. D. 1241, Henry halted with his army, attended by many of the nobility, 15 days in this town; and in 1260, Shrewsbury was again the rendezvous of the english forces.

Not long afterwards, the town was seized by Simon de Montford, in opposition to Henry; but his possession was of short duration; for in 1267 that monarch was again at the head of his army in Shrewsbury, occasioned by the disturbances of Llewellin,

In the year 1277, the courts of exchequer and king's bench were held here for several months, in order to awe the Welsh into submission.

At this period great numbers of wolves were destroyed in these parts and their heads brought to shrewfbury, where a large reward was paid to those who had killed a certain number.

On the morrow after Michaelmas day, 1283, Edward I. summoned a parliament to meet here, which removed to Acton Burnell, his chancellors, bishop Burnell's seat; where the nobles sat in the castle, and the commons deliberated upon the important concerns of the nation within the humble walls of a barn!

David, the last of the race of the princes of the Antient Britons, after his brother Liewellin was slain, was taken prisoner and tried by the parliament in Shrewsbury, who sentenced the unfortunate prince to be miserably dragged at a horse's tail through the streets, then hanged, afterwards beheaded, quartered, and his bowels burnt, which was inflicted with all it's cruelties, A. D. 1283.

The next monarch Edward II. visited Shrewsbury with his army; and in the same year, 1322, many of the nobility assembled here at a grand tournament, in which a son of the earl of March lost his life.

In the year 1326 the inhabitants of this town boldly feized the troublesome and rebellious earl of Arundel; which fervice was gratefully acknowledged by the king.

Richard II. held his parliament here in 1397 owing to the great love (as he himself said) that he had for this part of his subjects, and on his arrival here he gave a most sumptuous entertainment; and during the session he added much to the splendor of so grand an assemblage, presiding with the crown upon his head: While he was in Shrewsbury he made Chester a principality, from whence he had a numerous guard of the militia to attend his court here.

How transient is the political state of a kingdom! from the blessings of a court in peace, we must revert to the situation of this town amidst the horrors of a court in war.

In 1401, Henry IV. having unfuccessfully purfued the forces of Owen Glendourdwy, retreated into England; upon which Owen descended from the mountains, and, unresisted, plundered and burned the town and suburbs of Welsh Pool, laying waste the country between that town and ShrewsShrewsbury. Henry, determined to revenge so daring an insult, assembled a large army at this town, dividing it in three bodies, and entered Wales at seperate place, commanded by his son, the prince of Wales; earl of Arundel; and himself; but they were obliged to return without even seeing the enemy, Owen having prudently retired into the secure recesses of Snowden.

From his "native wilds" Owen had collected 12,000 hardy and refolute Britons, and had advanced to Ofwestry, A. D. 1403, in order to join Henry Piercy. (called Hot/pur) against the king, who had imprisoned the earl of March, and forbid the earl of Northumberland his court.

Hot/pur having resolved to get possession of Shrewsbury to savor his intended junction with Owen, marched with 14,000 chosen men near to it's walls, but the king advancing with a considerable force, Hot/pur drew off his army to an advantageous ground, eager to give him battle. Henry's 'courage failing' * he sent the abbot of Shrewsbury to offer terms, but the earl of Worcester artfully misrepresented the message to Hot pur, who in return sent desiance to Henry, and placing himself upon an eminence, he animated his foldiers by a short speech, when the battle began with a heavy discharge of arrows, at the same moment, from both armies: After three hour's dreadful conslict the fall of Hot/pur closed the tragic scene. The rebels sled in great consusion, leaving 6000 of their side dead upon the field; among whom were 200 Cheshire gentlemen. On the king's side there fell 1600, among these lay the earl of Stafford and the ten knights which the king had made that morning, and 3000 were grievously wounded.

This victory was gained on July 21, 1403; § in memory of which Henry tounded a college on the spot, and called it Battlefield. The body of Hotspur, after being buried, was taken up again, quartered, and sent to different parts of the kingdom: The earl of Worcester, the baton of Kinderton, and Sir Richard Vernon, were beheaded in Shrewsbury two days after the battle.

The inhabitants of this town affilted Edward earl of March in raising an army of 23 000 men in the neighborhood, with which he revenged his father's, the duke of York's death, by overcoming

Hereford, on Candlemas day, 1460.

Edward IV. frequently kept his court in this town; it was here the unfortunate prince Richard, duke of York, (who was murdered with his elder brother, Edward V. in the tower by order of their cruel and ambitious uncle) and his younger brother, George Plantagenet, were born.

The year 1484 affords us a shocking instance of the depravity of human nature, found in one Bamfter, who, owing to the kindnesses he had experienced from his master, (the duke of Buck. ingham) was fixed in a respectable situation near Shrewsbury-Upon a proclamation being issued to apprehend the duke, who had taken up arms against Richard III. he took refuge in the house of his trufty old fervant :- This good man was very anxious for the security of the duke, and gratefully proved it, by fending information to the sheriff, who secured the unfortunate guest so friendly, that his head, by the king's command was cut off in Shrewsbury; and the ungrateful villain, Banister, [received the promised reward of 1000l, for the destruction of his benevolent friend!

From this scene of detestable treachery, we shall lead our readers to one of curious integrity: -The earl of Richmond (afterwards Henry VII.) on his march against Richard III. came with his army to the Welfh gate of this town, demanding the keys in the name of king Henry : The head. bailiff (T. Mytton) fent an answer, solemnly declaring, 'If Henry entered Shrewsbury it should be over his (the bailiff's) belly." The inhabitants the next morning, upon discovering how their determined magistrate might suffer the earl to enter without forfeiting his oath, or injuring his conscience, prevailed upon him to open the gate; the resolute bailiff then laid himself upon she ground, belly upward! agreeable to his vows Henry passed over him, and led his army peaceably through the town, and was joined by Sir Gilbert Talbot with 2000 tenants &c. belonging to his nephew, the earl of Shrewsbury.

When the earl had gained the title of Henry VII. in return for the friendship he found here, he several times honored the Salopians with his presence; and in the year 1490 brought with him his queen, and prince Arthur, attended by a splendid train; and were present in St. Chad's choir, under rich canopies, at the high celebration were again here, and sumptuously entertained at the corporation's expence.

Shrewfbury has long been supposed to be the place where the sweating sickness, which destroyed great numbers of people in 1551, first broke out; but we should imagine this town to have caught the infection from a neighboring city, (Chester) for it is mentioned in the chronology of that place that the disorder was there in 1550.

Sir Henry Sydney, lord president of the Marches, celebrated St. George's seast here A. D. 1581; he went in grand procession from the council house to St. Chad's church, attended by the bailiss, aldermen, and the different companies, dressed in theire best livereys;" so numerous was the attendance, that when the foremost entered the church, the latter part had not less the council house. At his departure the inhabitants shewed great respect towards him, particularly the masters and scholars of the free schools, several of whom were in green sancy dresses with willow branches on their heads, standing on an island in the Severn, a short way from the town, "Cowdroy's Chester Guide, P. 73. and and on the approach of the lord president's Farge one of the boys made this pathetic oration :

Oh flay the barge, rowe not foe faft,
Rowe not foe faft, oh flay awhile;
Oh flay and hear the playutts at laft,
Of nymphs, that harbour in thys iffe.

Thear woe is greate, greate moan they make, With doleful tunes they doe lament;
They howle, they crie, theire leave to tacke,
Theire garments greene for woe they rent.

O Seavern, turn thy fiream quite backe,
Alas why doyft thou us annoye?
Wilt thou cause us thys Lord to lacke,
Whose presence is our onelie joye?

But harke, methinks I heare a founde,
A wofull founde I plaguly heare,
Some forrow greate thear hart dothe wounde,
Pass on my Lord, to them draw neare.

Other pieces lamenting his departure were alfo fung, after which the bailiffs and aldermen proceeded down the river with him to Atcham, where they dined on board his barge, and took their leave of him.

In the troubles of Charles I. Shrewsbury frequently proved a secure retreat for that unfortunate prince: The gentlemen of the county on August 8, 1642, signed a declaration in his favor; and the corporation resolved in common council, 'If his majesty came to Shrewsbury, that the town should make him the best entertainment the troublesome time could afford." which affectionate reception he experienced on his coming here September 30.

· Clarendon.

On his next visit he found a great conflux of gentry here, feveral of whom undertook to raife levies of horse and foot at their own expence : Sir Richard Newport, on being created a peer in this town, gave his majesty 6000l. On account of the scarcity of money, the king ereded a mint, and great quantities of plate were brought into Shrewsbury to be coined into money; which, with the liberal contributions of the inhabitants; prevented discontent in the atmy on account of pay. He afterwards appoined Lord Capel governor of the town, who caufed a deep ditch to be made from the river to the castle, (still visible) placing a draw-bridge over it, and erected a strong battery at the upper end of Frankwell. Thus tortified it refisted the attacks of the king's enemies, who had made feveral affaults but to no purpose; till at length it was betrayed to the parliament's forces, under the command of colonels Mytton and Bowes, to the ruin of many of the inhabitants, who were plundered of their all. In the year 1651 colonel Benbow, who had joined the royal standard on the king's first coming to Shrewsbury, was that for his loyalty! in a small piece of ground adjoining the entrance into the castle, and buried in St. Chad's church-yard.

The year 1683 proved awefully alarming to the residents of the town; on February 7th, the Castle-foregate was threatened with destruction, owing to a terrible fire breaking out, which raged with great sury several hours; and the shock of an earthquake was sensibly selt in Shrewsbury and it's neighborhood in this year.

In the year 1687 this town was visited by K. James II. great numbers of nobility and gentry attended his court at the council house and the different companies of tradesmen were particularly loyal on the occasion, parading thro' the streets, which were spread over with gravel for the purpose, with all the grandeur of the compositions: his majesty expressed himself highly pleased with the entertainment he received from the body-corporate, and, very condescendlingly, gave them one instance of his royal affection on his departure, by kindly accepting of a purse full of gold!

In the rebellion, 1715, a provincial body of horse and foot was raised by lord Newport, fir C. Lloyd, bart. W. Kynaston, T. Cardner, and J. Fownes, esqrs. for the protection of Shrews, bury, the walls were also put into a state of defence fence, new gates &c. made, and brigadier Dormer's regiment, then lying in this town, received orders to march to Preston, as Shrewsbury was deemed formidable enough under the security of it's own garrison.

In the rebellion, 1745, lord Powis raised a regiment in this town for the service of government; the loyal spirit of the Salopians inspired many gentlemen of the neighborhood to enter as volunteers, who gave an additional suffre, if possible, to the military appearance of that promising corps of fine young fellows.

This town, once more, suffered considerably from the destructive power of fire A. D. 1774. About 2 o'clock on the afternoon of Good-Friday it broke out in the Abbey-foregate, and raged with dreadful devastation through the whole of the day, entirely destroying 47 dwelling-houses, 16 barns, 15 stables, 4 shops, and several stacks of hay; 5 more houses were much damaged by the slames. To alleviate, in some measure, the distress of the sufferers, nearly 1000l. was chearfully subscribed, and those whose circumstances required immediate relief, instantly received it.

Da

Having

Having brought the "History of the Town" down to our own time, we shall proceed in giving a short description of it's present state.

The fituation of Shrewsbury has ever been allowed to be peculiarly pleasant and healthful; these advantages it owes to the happy eminence it is seated upon, answering to it's Saxon name Scrobbesburie, which as well as Pengwerne, called so by it's founders, the Britons, signifies a brow of alder trees; and from the first of these names we may safely conclude the word Shrewsbury is derived.——The Welsh name for it in the present day, is Mwythig, viz. pleasant; and as old Speed says, "Wholsome is the aire, desectable and goode, yeelding the springe and the autumne, seede time and harueste, in a temperate condition, and assorbeth health to the inhabitants in all seasons of the yeere."

Shrewsbury has, of late years, made a rapid progress in the taste and number of it's buildings; and the flourishing situation of it's rising manufactories promises a certain encrease of honor, wealth, and population: The woollencloth manufacture, alone, employs several hundred hands in different parts of the town.

We shall open the description of the town at it's E. extremity, from whence there is an advantageous prospect of it; and where (dividing the Lendon and Bath roads) stands St. Giles's church, a desicious morsel for the antiquarian, being the only Saxon relique remaining in the town; the inside has a plain appearance, but we must not omit mentioning that the root is formed of Irish oak; in one corner of the church yard is a beautiful mausoleum, and on one of it's sides this elegant inscription,

Ut Nemini noceret Mortuus,
Qui Unicuique pro re nata succurrere voluit Vivus
Hic extra Urbem sese contumulandum præcipiebat

Another, handsomely ornamented, covers the remains of Colonel Congreve and his lady.

Proceeding down the Abbey-foregate, a long, irregular, spacious street, on your right hand is the Whitehall, a most desirable residence in the possession of R. Wingsield, esq; and a little lower down stands the Abbey church, or, church of the Hely Cross; this venerable structure is only a small remnant of that once magnificent monastery erected by the first earl of Shrewsbury, in the year 1083; the original sigure of this great and good man is still preserved at the uppersend of the S. aile, he is dressed in armour, and this inscription over it,

· Justitan'e Prius Mirer Bellin'e Laborum'

'The figure underneath, at first placed within the monastery of St. Peter and St. Paul, and afterwards found in the ruins, was removed hither by the direction of his majefty's heralds at arms, in their visitation, to remain as it was originally intended, in perpetual memory of Roger de Montgomery, Earl of Shrewsbury, who was kinfman to the Conqueror, and one of his chief commanders in the victorious battle ct Hastings. He erected many useful buil-· dings here, both public and private, not only · fortified this town with walls, and built the caftle on the ishmus, but also the caftles of · Ludlow and Bridgnorth, with the monastery of · Wenlock: He founded and endowed in an am-' ple manner this large Benedicline Abbey, and when he was advanced in years, by the confent of his Countels Adelisa, he entered into holy orders, and was shorn a Monk of this his own foundation, where he lies interred.

. He died the 27th July, 1094.

Another figure of this earl is placed over the fine gothic window and door in the W. fide of the tower; a mitre and fword were in his hands but releatless time has only suffered part of the fword to remain. The altar piece is neat, and there are feveral handsome monuments near it : but what a repast does the epicure in antiquities meet with in those hoary vestiges which almost furround this gothic pile! the most perfect piece is within a garden on the S. fide of the church; an elevated octagonal building, in the gothic ftile; this fine piece of architecture has been particularly noticed by that valuable member of Society, Mr. Pennant. There is a peal of eight bells in the fleeple: we shall close the account of this church with the following pointed lines. occasioned by the vicar ordering a fine painting of our Saviour on the cross to be removed out of the church, in 1728,

The parson's the man, Leshim say what he can, Will for gain leave his God in the lurch;
Could Iscariot do more, Had it been in his pow'r,
Than to turn his Lord out of the church?

This following equally farcastic piece was the reply,

The Lord I adore, Is mighty in pow'r,
The one only living and true;
But that Lord of yours, That was turn'd out of doors;
Had just as much knowledge as you.

But fince you bemoan This God of your own,

Cheer up my difcenfolate brother;

Though it feems very odd, Yet if this be your God,

Mr. Burley + can make you another.

A Painter In Shrewsbury.

Near this church flands the Public Subscription Charity School, where boys and girls are educated and cloathed by a general subscription. On the left hand lies the suburb of Colcham, where has lately been erected a very spacious building, in which a great number of both sexes, are employ'd in the woollen-cloth manufacture.

You now arrive at the English Bridge, an ornament, as well as use to the town; consisting of 7 losty arches; over the center one, facing the N. is the head of Sabrina. with the arms of the town, in basso relievo, and date of the year (viz.MDCCLXXIV.) when the bridge was finished, and on the other side, the head of Neptune, &c. it is built of white stone, with handsome ballustrades, &c. and on each side of the driving way it is slagged for the convenience of the foot passenger. Mr. Gwynn, a native of the town, was the architect.

Near to this bridge, on the S. side, stand the remains of a Franciscan, or Grey Friary; in the yard is a stone cossin, used in the present day as a water trough! In Back-lane, not far from hence, is Bowdler's Charity School, a neat brick building, erected and endowed agreeable to the will of an alderman of that name: Nearly adjoining is a small, but very neat, chapel for the Roman Catholies; and in the same lane one of the most considerable starch-manufactories in the kingdom is carried on; the duty, only, arising to government from it amounts to about 12000l. annually:

On the brow of the Wyle-cop stands the Lion Inn, a very spacious and elegant receptacle for travellers: Opposite is a small airy street, part of it pleasantly open to the country, called Dog-pole, in which is the Post-Office; and on leaving it to the right hand you soon come to Saint Julian's church, a small, but neat modern building; the inside deserves the notice of those who are pleased with an appearance of neatness; the galleries, on each side, are supported by handsome columns in the tuscan order; at the W. end of the church is a neat organ, and time-piece; the E. window over the alter has been lately painted by an artist of the town (Mr. Prichard) with the emblems &c. of the crucifixion. Upon a plain monument on the N. wall is this strong admonitory couplet,

"Thus age and youth piomifcuous croud the tomb, "Thou seader canft not shun th' impending doom.

Patron, E. of Tankerville. Vicar, Rev. Mr. Owen.

Nearly joining the above stands St. A'kmond's church, an irregular, antique pile, excepting the spire, which has lately been rebuilt in a neat manner, owing to the dangerous state the old one had for feveral years past been in. The infide of the church affords little matter for the descriptive pen; the altarpiece is neatly finished in the corinthian order; the roof is supported by pillars, like the structure, in the norman-gothic ftyle; in the N. corner, near the chancel, are two full length figures reclined on a gothic tomb, W. Jones, elq; alderman of Salop, and Eleanor, his wife, he died A.D. 1612. Above are two handsome marble monuments. one to the memory of Sir T. Jones, Knd. lord chief justice of the court of common pleas, he died in 1672, in his 78th year; the other to the memory of his grandfon and heir, T. Jones, efq; member for Shrewsbury.

Patron, The King. Vicar, Rev. Mr. De Courcy Croffing

Croffing Ox-lane you come to Saint Mary's church, built in the form of a cross, with a lofty spire at the W. end, being upwards of 70 yards from the ground to the cock. The infide of the church does much credit to the parishioners, not only from it's monumental ornaments. handsome Organ, &c. but it's being entirely new pewed gives it a neat and uniform appea rance; the altar-piece is well executed in the corinthian flyle, and the elegant painted window over it was given by the parish of St. Chad. having made use of this church during the time their new one was erecting; it is allowed to be an excellent piece of workmanship, representing the different branches from the flock of Jeffe. There are feveral handsome monuments in the chancel, particularly in the chapel on the S. side there is a beautiful one by Nelson, it is a naked boy in a penfive attitude, leaning on an urn, with this infcription underneath,

On the N. fide of this chapel is the figure of a knight lying upon a tomb stone, with a lion under his feet; who this represents is uncertain, and over the door is Q. Elizabeth's arms, and these sentences,

At that time, Deborah a Prophete's, j udged Israel. Judges IV. 4.

Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excelless them all.

Prov. XXXI, 29.

Arms feareth the Lord, she shall be praifed. Prov. XXXI, 30.

There are eight musical bells in the steeple: the situation of the church being on the most elevated part of the town, gives it's spire, at a distance, an uncommon lotty appearance, it has several times suffered much from high winds, in 1739 the cock on the top being blown aside, one Cadman took it down, and replaced it again; he was prompted to shew his surther dexterity by affixing a rope from the top of the spire to the Gay Meadow, across the Severn, and in slying down, as he termed it, the cord sailed, and he fell into St. Mary's friars, dashed into pieces; a grave at the soot of the satal steeple received his shattered remains, and a plain stone placed in the wall near them, with this inscription, het this small monument record the name Of CADMAN, and to future times proclaim, How by'n attempt to fly from this high spire, Across the Sabrine stream he did acquire His satal end: 'Twas not for want of skill Or courage to perform the talk, he fell, No, no, a faulty cord being drawn too tight, Hurried his soul on high, to take her slight, Which bid the body here beneath, good night

On the S. W. fide of the church yard is a somb flone with this inscription, Thomas Anderson, youngest son of George Anderson Esq.

He was born at Gales, near Richmond, in Yorkshire. Jan. 13, 1710 Departed this life Dec. 11, 1752. Aged 31.

Stop Traveller

I've paff'd, repaff'd, The Seas and diffant Lands; Can find no reft, But in my Saviours hands.

This unfortunate young person belonged to Ligonier's horse, but deserting from them, he was taken and tried at Worcester, and removed here where orders came for his execution, and, tho great, and even weighty, intercession was used in his behalf, he was shot in Kingsland, a little below the shoemaker's arbour, behaving with perfect serenity during the awful scene. The Vicar of this church is nominated by the mayor of the town, and the head master of the free schools, the schoolmaster to be sworn to give his voice freely and impartially.

Rev. Mr. Blakeway, is the present Vicar:

Adjoining the church yard stand St. Mary's Alm. Houses, sounded by Digery Waters, a draper of this town; the allowance to the people is paid by the draper's company, who have their hall here, in which is an antient picture of Edward IV. (who granted their charter) and some curious inscriptions

On the S. E. fide the church yard flands the Infirmary, in a fine fituation, the back front being open to the country; it was opened April 25. 1747, and is supported by voluntary contributions; it's healing arms are open not only to the town and neighbourhood, but the truftees can recommend proper objects from any part of the country; the benefits which the unfortunate inhabitants of this restorative mansion daily receive. do infinite honour to the benevolent supporters of it. Not far from hence stands the Council House, a spacious building, on the brow of a pleafant bank, hanging delightfully over the Severn; it owes it's name to some of our kings and the lords of the marches holding their courts in it; here are some good portraits.

Near to it is the Castle, built of red stone by Roger de Montgomery, it has a bold appearance from the country, and has often braved the assaults of the daring assaulter; it was always celebrated as a fortress of the first importance for the security of the marches; it's consequence in the civil wars against Charles the first is well known; in the 15th year of Charles the second the town gave up the castle to the king, and it was stripped of every warlike implement by the order order of James II. it is now a most desirable residence occupied by lady Bath, who at a considerable expence has made it an elegant and delightfully pleasant habitation, and the whole inside of the outer walls being converted into a rural pleasure ground, ornamented with shrubs and slowers, which with the noble ruins of gateways, battlements, &c. captivate the eye.

On the outfide of the castle is a convenient and pleafant walk, lately made, the prospect from it is very extensive and beautiful. Close by is the newly erected County Gaol, and House of Correction, the building is very extensive, furrounded by a high wall; it stands in a airy situation; the plan of it is agreeable to the advice of the late benevolent Mr. Howard. Returning into the town you come to that much respected leminary of learning, the Free Schools, built in a handsome style, of white stone; they were first endowed by king Edward VI. A.D. 1552, but Q. Elizabeth in 1571 further endowed them by granting feveral lands, tythes, &c. At that time the schools confisted of a range of timber buildings, but A. D. 1595 a handsome pile of Aone building was erected, and in 1630 another building, in the same style, joining at right angle of 80 feet long; prayers are read every morning in the chapel before the schools open, and in the evening when the scholars quit; there is a large and valuable library over this chapel, at one end of which is a collection of natural and artificial curiosities. Lord chancellor Jefferies, lord chief justice sir T. Jones, sir Philip Sidney, John Taylor, L. L. D. and many other learned characters received their education in these schools: several scholarships and exhibitions in both Universities belong to this soundation: In the school chest in the exchequer is a letter of Q. Elizabeth's, signed with her own hand.

Higher up in School-lane is the Gaol where the county priloners are at present confined in: entering Raven-street again, you pass the once celebrated Raven-Inn, remarkable for being the quarters of Farquhar, when he wrote the Revisiting Officer, it is now converted into a Hop and Cheese market. Further, on the left hand is Ox-lane, and at the head of Pride-hill stands the Butter-cross, on the top of which is a large reservoir supplied with water from the works under the english bridge: exclusive of this supply, the inhabitants have recourse to the Conduit cocks encks, which are placed in convenient parts of the town; this water comes from a fine fpring near Crow Meole, about a mile d flant, through leal pipes under the Severn, and first opened in 1574. On the left hand lower down are the Double and Single Butcher Rows, Supplied with as good meat, in general, as any town in the kingdom: At the bottom of Pride-hill, on the left hand, is High-fireet, in which, fronting the market place, is that elegant modern building the Guild and Shire Hall, built of white stone in 1785; on the front of the pediment, which is supported by four lotty columns in the Ionic order, is a fine baffo relievo figure of Judice leated on a rock, under which is the grand entrance; over the middle door is the arms of the town handsomely ornamented : the Nisi Prius and Crown bars, in point of elegance and convenience, would do honour to the metropolis you ascend up a noble geometrical stair-cale to the Guild Hall, (a spacious room), the Exchequer (in which is a fine half length portrait of the brave admiral Benbow, who was born in this town), the Record Office, Grand Jury Room &ce nearly adjoining is the Market House, the infide of which, exclusive of it's being the mart for eorn and welch flannells, proves an agreeable retreat in rainy weather for walking in: Continuing up High-fireet you leave on the left hand Grope-lane, (to called from the wantonness of fome monks who refided near it), this leads to St. Alkmond's, the Fish-boards, Country Butcher Row &c. in this freet is the Socinian chapel, built at the expence of government in 1715, on the fite of one pulled down by a mob : At the upper end of the ffreet, on the right, is Milkfireet, in which is St. Chad's chapel, being the only remnant of the large and venerable church dedicated to that faint, which fell to the ground on Wednelday, July 9. 1788, 'tis impossible to describe the consternation the neighborhood was thrown into at the moment; the chimes had just gone, after the clock struck four in the morning, when the tower gave way, and falling upon the body of the church, tore every thing before it to the ground, demolishing organ, bells, monuments, pews, in short, scarce a vestige remained but a heap of ruins, out of which, that part called the bishop's court (the walls being left flanding) was made into a chapel, in which are feveral neat monuments faved from the ruins. St. Chad's Alms Houses are on the E. fide of the church yard, founded by Mr. Tipton, brewer, in 1409, for decayed perfon.

On St. Chads-hill is an antique ecclesiassical building, from whence a subterraneous passage is said to have once been to the Dimery under the old church. On the left is Swan-hill, which leads to the Walls, here is a neat modern built chapel belonging to the Presbyterians, on the front is this inscription,

This Building was erected in the Year 1767, for the l'ublic Worthip of God, and in Detence of the Rights of Majorities in Protestant Differting Congregations in choosing their own Ministers."

You now proceed through Cross-hill to St. Johns-hill, a small neat street, in which is the Quaker's meeting house, a true resemblance of the neatness of those who frequent it; at the end of this street is Quarry Place, most delightfully situated near the entrance into the Quarry, so called from stone being formerly got out of it, but now this spot of ground boasts one of the the siness shang enchantly over the majestic Severa, while the sweetly-winding stream closely embraces the verdant bank the whole extent of the lower walk; close by the river's side is a double alcove, one front to the water, the other agreeably leads the eye up the middle walk, at the upper end of which, near the top of Cleremond-hill, flands the newly erected church of St. Chad, a beautiful piece of workmanship, in a circular form, with a letty tower, dome, and crofs, on the S. E. fide; the dome is supported by a screen of corinthian columns, upon an octagon base, ornamented with Ionic pilasters equal to those round the body of the church; upon this base is a gallery 9 feet wide, encircled with iron railing, from whence there is a grand profped of great part of the fertile counties of Salop and Montgomery; is built of white stone, as most of the public edifices in this town are, procured from Grinfhill Rock, about 6 miles off, and little interior, if any, to that got in the ifle of Portland; the entrance into the church is under a grand portico supported by doric columns; the altar-piece is ol plain oak, and has a neat appearance, but the composite pillars which support the arch at the entrance to it have a noble effect upon the eye, from the peculiar richness of the caps, &c. the cieling is beautifully ornamented with cherubs amidst the clouds, surrounded with borders of foliage, and is supported from the gallery (which flands firm upon Ionic Rone columns), by iron pillar pillars, encaled, with neat corinthian caps, which appear, at the fame time. light and elegant; in the gallery, fronting the altar, flands a handfome organ.

Pairen, The King. Vicar, Rev. Mr. Stedman.

On the opposite side of the river, on a pleafant airy bank, Rands the House of Industry, and if we may judge from the unitorm lowering of the poor's rates fince it's inflitution, we may venture to fay, to the honor of the conductors of it, that it is worthy of that appellation; this extensive and noble building was erected by the truffees of the Founding Ho pital in London, and numbers of orphans were brought to it for some time; the managers giving up the plan, it was purchased for it's present purpose; the people are employed in the woollen cloth manufacture. Near here is that pleafant piece of ground called Kingfland, where the feveral Arbors are which are visited annually (on the monday fortnight after Whitfunday) by the different trading companies, who come in grand procelfion out of the town, over the weith bridge hiher, when each company repair to their own arbor, and spend the day in the height of festivity: The mayor and his attendants visit the respedwhole procession moves homeward, passing through Coleham, over the english bridge into the town. This is called Shrewsbury Show, and originated in the processions on Corpus Christs days to St. Chad's church.

Returning, at the bottom of St. Johns-hill you pass the Theatre, which is generally opened in September, it has lately been much improved and ornamented in the infide, and the addition of a new fluccoed front makes it's outward appearance more pleafing to the eye; you leave Barker-fireet (in which a very confiderable woollen manufactory is carried on) to the left, and continuing through a fhort street called the Carriers-inn, you leave to the right Shoplatch, in which is the well known, and much respected Talbot-Inn), and arrive at Mardolhead; passing down Mardol, one of the best ftreets in the town, you leave Dog-lane on the left, in which is a neat chapel for the Anabaptifls, lower down, on the right, is Roushill, and on the left Hills-lane, in which the Methodifts have a meeting house; at the bottom of Mardol is the Welfh Bridge, much admired for it's antique appearance, it confifts of 6 arches, but time, to whose uncontrouled power the whole Arength of art must yield, has laid his desolating hand upon it, accordingly the first stone of a new bridge, a few yards below the old one, has been laid by the Mayor; each subscriber of two guineas, receives a ticket from the corperation that frees him from the tolls of the town. The curious gateway which flood on the bridge, was lately taken down, and the antient figure from the front of it, with the arms, removed to one end of the market house; this figure has generally been supposed to be that of Llewellyn the last prince of N. Wales, but from his armour being blazoned with fleur-de-iis, and the fillets fastened with roles, we judge it to represent one belonging to the houle of York or Lancafter.

You are now arrived in Frankwell, a large part of the suburbs, here is a quay, and one on the opposite side of the river, for barges to unload &c. at; at the top of this suburb, delightfully situated, is a handsome edifice, called Millington's Hospital, sounded and endowed agreeable to the will of Mr. James Millington, Draper, of this town, Dated 1734, for 12 Decayed House-keepers, and the Education of 20 Boys and 20 Girls; his real estate was disputed in Chancery, but his personal estate amounting to 8000s, went to the use of this Hospital.

Chan

The town walls are nearly gone to decay, the small remains afford a pleasant walk: On Cotton-hill, a suburb leading to the Chester road, is the house in which admiral Benhow was been a the adjoining suburb, the Castle-foregone, leads to Drayton, &c.

The body corporate of Shrewshury consists of a mayor, recorder, steward, 24 aldermen, 48 assistants, town clerk, swo d bearer, marshall, serjeants at mace, yeomen, &c. the present mayor is Henry Bevan, esq; recorder, Edw. lord Clive. The town sends two members to parliament, the present worthy representatives are, Sir W. Pulteney, bart. Hon. Wm. Hill.

Shrewsbury has long been famed for it's excellent brawn, a great quantity of which is not only dispersed to different parts of this kingdom. but exported to foreign countries: nor must we omit mentioning the high esteem that Shrewsbury cakes have long been held in every where, insomuch that the pleasing muse of Shenstone has tuned the lyre to their duscet charms.
